

Leading Virtual Teams: Increasing Virtual Work Effectiveness

Meets	Three 3-hour live-online sessions
Fee	$720 GISC Members: $670
CE hours	9
Format	Live-Online

Virtual teams can outperform co-located teams—when leaders rethink the fundamentals of communication, cooperation, and trust-building for the virtual environment. Leading a virtual team is not the same as leading a co-located team; underestimating the differences can have a profound impact on organizational outcomes and on individual stress levels and wellbeing. Knowing how to develop and maintain high-performing virtual teams has become a critical competitive advantage.

In this program, GISG faculty will address and make explicit the often-overlooked keys to leading a high-performing virtual team. Getting there, and avoiding the feelings of isolation and alienation that are all too pervasive among virtual team members, requires a savvy, thoughtful leader who pays equal attention to tasks and relationships, and to both individuals as well as team dynamics.

All tools, assessments and virtual classroom activities incorporate best practices and current research. Participants can expect short lectures, both large group and small group projects or discussions where everyone has the opportunity to speak, as well as opportunities for individual reflection, and assignments to complete between sessions that will result in a completed plan for leading their own high-performing virtual team.

“It was a gift to watch Louise in the role of facilitator; she made using the technology look so elegant while also taking care of the process and the participants. I am also thankful for the opportunity to work via Adobe Connect. I liked it very much and have decided to learn it and start making courses virtually.”
